I find it interesting that in the upcoming election, the Democrats appear likely to nominate either a black man or a woman. This has prompted many to wonder about the likelihood of a black man or a woman actually getting elected. Gallup has been studying questions like this for several years and, somewhat surprisingly, about 90% of voters have said they are likely to vote for a black or a woman, as well as Jewish or Catholic person. However, the likelihood of voting for a Mormon is presently...
